How can a college campus lose approximately two hundred students in a matter of one year? That question is on the minds of all the students and faculty at the Penn State Wilkes-Barre campus this year.

Last year the campus had 766 students attending its campus, but this year only 575 students are currently attending our campus. For such a small campus, this decrease in population is a significant amount considering in 2012, there were 321,027 people living within Luzerne County and 7,515 of those people were living within Lehman Township.

Now, you must be wondering: what has caused this substantial drop in the amount of students on our campus. Well, there are several factors that are involved in this population drop.

The first factor is the increasing costs to attend college each year. Based on a Brown University study, there is a direct relationship between the amount of college drop-outs and the increasing costs of tuition. Many of the students who choose to drop-out or not attend university usually don't have the financial ability to pay for the costs due to their life circumstances or basic lack of income. For the Penn State Wilkes-Barre campus, the 2012-2013 tuition was $12,474 and the 2013-2014 tuition is $12,568, which is a $94 increase in one year. In most of these prospective students' minds, they think to themselves that maybe a college degree isn't worth the money or time. They may need to use their wages to afford basic needs for themselves or their families.

The next factor involved in the decrease of college students is the large variety of university choices for prospective students within Luzerne County. For example, there are six different colleges within Luzerne County that provide a variety of bachelor's and associate's degrees for prospective students. These colleges and universities are King's College, Wilkes University, Luzerne County Community College, Penn State Wilkes-Barre, Penn State Hazleton, and Misericordia College. Obviously, prospective students have a large choice pool and a majority of students will choose the most cost-efficient or diverse choice.

The last factor is the lack of four-year and two-year degrees on this satellite campus. While Penn State Wilkes-Barre offers six bachelor's degrees and four associate's degrees, the other universities offer up to 25 different bachelor's and associate's degrees. This variety in degrees will undoubtedly attract more students since the other universi- ties have more options for incoming students. Also, these universities tend to advertise more within Luzerne County as compared to the Penn State Wilkes-Barre campus. Multiple bulletin boards and mail-outs can be found in this area for these other universities, but it's rare to see a Penn State Wilkes-Barre advertisement.

Speech Class on the Web?
Dr. Lozano Clears Up Some Controversy

There was a furor in the December 11th Student Government meeting. It was heard that there were plans for CAS 100A (Effective Speech) usually taught by Prof. Bachman to be made into a web class. Students reacted angrily, with many wondering how a class revolving around public speaking could possibly be rendered into online format. For those who signed up for the class in Spring 2014, The Revolt has some good news: according to Dr. Lozano, the Director of Academic Affairs, CAS 100A will still be taught IN PERSON by Prof. Bachman. In fact, Dr. Lozano has told The Revolt that the class would only be offered as an online course in the Summer semesters. This would mainly benefit those who cannot attend in person classes, as well as those who attend other PSU campuses. As for online learning in general? Dr. Lozano tells us that University Park studies show similar academic achievement in those who take online courses as compared to those who take the course in person.

Letter from the Editor

I can’t believe how fast this semester has come and gone. It seems like just a few weeks ago that I returned from summer break, quietly panicking about the future of this newspaper.

At the beginning of this semester, enrollment was historically low and, at times, I wondered if we would be able to even continue producing publications! Thankfully, our new crop of members, some Freshmen and some returning members of our campus, allowed The Revolt to not only survive, but thrive. These new faces brought a vitality and diversity to this publication that we desperately needed. I could not have asked for a better group of people to work with this semester and thankfully, many of these people will remain to carry on our tradition into the next year.

As always, we are recruiting new members to work with us at The Revolt and hope to see many new faces in this upcoming Spring 2014 semester. We will continue our quest for journalistic excellence and the exposure of the truth, as well as being the voice of our small (and possibly dying!) campus.

As I prepare to leave this newspaper in the capable hands of President-Elect Christine Tenny and leave Penn State Wilkes-Barre, I realize how honored I have been to meet and work with everyone at this campus. If there’s one thing I’ve learned at college in the last three semesters here, it’s this: time flies, so be sure to grab it by the horns!

The JFK Conspiracy?

November 22, 2013 marked the 50 year anniversary of the assassination of John F Kennedy. On November 22, 1963, JFK was shot while at a campaign stop in Dallas, Texas. Kennedy was riding in his Lincoln limousine when shots erupted. One bullet went into Kennedy’s neck and the other bullet to the right side of his head. It was determined that Lee Harvey Oswald assassinated Kennedy, but that allegation was never proven. Oswald himself was assassinated two days later by Jack Ruby.

There are many rumors and conspiracy theories surrounding this famed assassination such as a second shooter theory, the Mafia, the Soviets, the CIA, the Cubans, Lyndon Johnson, the Grassy Knoll, and the KKK. All in their own way thought they had a right to kill JFK. Remember even with the report of the Warren Commission, which was the professional committee assigned to the case who deemed Oswald and Oswald Alone killed JFK, a dazzling 61% of Americans believe that it was not just Oswald in the book depository. I myself am one of those people.

The Kennedy assassination was one of the most memorable moments in the 20th century and in American history. It was to that generation what the attacks on September11, 2001 were to our generation. Admit it we all remember where we were when we heard of the attacks, regardless of our age. To confirm this I asked some older faculty on campus about that day and my findings were correct. Every person I asked remembered exactly where they were and told me. Most were in school and they even recalled what class they were in.

Heyna or No? The Story of the NEPA Dialect

As I was visiting friends at Temple University in Philadelphia, I was told that I had an accent and I was obviously from the Scranton area. I always associated accents with the south and west, but never with my home. I was somewhat offended until my friends told me that they get that comment all the time. This got me thinking. I came to campus on that following Monday and I asked a person from another state if we, as in the people from NEPA, had an accent. The person replied “Yes! You guys talk really weird.” What seems like normal speech to us might sound uneducated or silly to others. There is no real reason why we talk like this but I have made my own observations. I believe that combinations of cultures such as Italian, Irish, English, Russian, and Polish immigrants and the cross breeding between cultures lead to different accents and unique combinations of words. Also the lack of education in the area’s coal miners adds to the dialect. Our dialect has been the talk of comedians, souvenirs, shops, and viral YouTube videos. I have put together some words and phrases that you might hear in NEPA or in the subconscious speech of us who live here.

I will start off the list with the one that I catch myself doing and that I hear the most comments about. This word that I speak of is the word “tree.” In other places a tree is a redwood, a pine and so on. In NEPA, the word “tree” can refer to these things but in NEPA may also refer to the number “3.” Also, what some might call a sub, we call a hoagie. There are other words that exemplify the NEPA accent. For example, the word wash is often pronounced “warsh” in this area. Another example of a mispronunciation is that of the word milk. The “I” gets lost in translation and the word “milk” is often pronounced “melk.” The words hotdog and sandwich are pronounced “hoddog” and “sangwitch,” respectively. Also, the words “to” and “the” get changed around in this locale. Instead of saying, “I am going to the store,” a person from NEPA would say “I am going “ta” “da” store.” The word “youse” gets thrown around here a lot as well. The word “youse” simply means “you guys.” Now that I have told you some words in our dialect, I will open the door to some key phrases that you might hear around here. I will start off very simply with the phrase “jeet!” This phrase simply means “did you eat” in which somebody would reply “no ju?” which simply means “no, did you.” The next phrase I will bring to your attention is the phrase “a couple two tree.” As I stated earlier, “tree” means “3.” This phrase indicates that there are a few people in a group. You would usually address this group as “youse”. And then there is the almighty “Heyna.” No one knows where the word has originated from but I believe it’s just a sped up version of the phrase “aint it”. You will hear the word “heyna” used at the end of a sentence when someone wants to know whether you agree with them. Heyna simply means “isn’t it right.” For example I would say, “The Reo Chips is the greatest newspaper on earth, heyna?” Of course, you would yes because it is.

This is just some of the words and phrases that we use here in Northeastern Pennsylvania. These words are in our history, in our present, and in our future. They are as big of a part of our culture as anything we do around here. We should not be thought of any differently simply because we talk like this.

The Great Smoking Debate

It was a fiery hot topic in Student Government. The populous of Penn State Wilkes-Barre’s Student Government association largely broke into factions in November to debate about tobacco usage on campus. Some talked of the interminable litter of cigarette butts around the entrance to the Student Commons, and others talked about the freedom of choice and responsibility. The anti-smoking party extolled the public health benefits of making smoking as inconvenient as possible by restricting the use of tobacco to the several on campus “smoking huts” (or, as Chancellor Davis referred to them “cabanas”). The pro-smokers reminded the governmental association that we are all responsible adults and should not be placed at such an inconvenience to consume a legal product. The rhetoric and debate deviated far from the original topic of cigarette butts outside the student commons, with some students proposing fines for violating the campus smoking policy on the grounds of public health, a move which infuriated many. Notably, this campus’ policies are far in excess of the University policy that one may not smoke within 25 feet of entrances. Unfortunately for those individuals, it was later determined that security would have no means of enforcing such a fine. Others proposed placing more cigarette receptacles around campus stating that the litter effect of smoking would be greatly reduced and that the fire risk of putting lit cigarettes in trash cans would be ameliorated. A suggestion was a “mixed” receptacle which would contain both trash containers and cigarette disposal. Further, there was a contention about how the smoking huts were so inconvenient to students who choose to smoke, many of which only have a precious few minutes to smoke between classes. Another dormant issue brought to light in this debate was the usage of electronic cigarettes. It was clarified that, for the purposes of smoking policy, a person using an electronic vapor cigarette would be treated as if using a conventional “analog” tobacco cigarette. However, some saw this as unfair due to the greatly decreased environmental effects of using e-cigs. Unlike conventional cigarettes, they do not produce an odor or create secondhand smoke. The anti-smokers argued that it is not proven that e-cigs are healthier and that their secondhand smoke is still harmful. Due to the fact that this product is so new (e-cigs were only invented in 2007), long term tests have continued on page 6.

There’s Some Big Ones This Year, Heyna?

Students from the city might not fully understand the tradition behind deer season. This year’s rifle season started on December 2nd and runs through the 14th. During those two weeks, antlered and antlerless deer may be harvested using a hunting rifle. This American tradition started centuries ago when pioneers and settlers needed food. Back then, of course, there was no limit on killing deer. It was reported that one man named Arthur Young had killed over 1,500 in his lifetime alone.

In modern society, not all people rely strictly on hunting for meat. Hunting isn’t a team sport and it shouldn’t be approached as a game. To many, it’s a tradition like Thanks-giving. To some schools and businesses around the state, the first Monday of deer season is of you who might not be from the area. First off, an individual may only hunt if they’ve obtained a license from the Game Commission. People from out of state are allowed to hunt but they must pay extra for a license. Modern seasons are much shorter than in the past and heavier fines result from failure to comply with the numerous laws. For example, a deer may not be moved at all unless properly tagged. Orange must be worn at all times, and only one deer may be killed per day.

If you’re against hunting or not accustomed to it yet, here’s some food for thought: hunting reduces the risk of deer related catastrophes such as deer/car collisions, the destruction of recreational land by deer, and reduces the deadly spread of Lyme disease.

Deer hunting is a tradition, a ritual and a bonding experience. It’s been in families for generations and it teaches a great deal of life knowledge about survival.

It all comes down to the ethics of the person holding the gun. Wild game should be respected and properly killed and cleaned. If it wasn’t for hunting you wouldn’t be reading this. Survival was necessary for our ancestors and luckily they overcame extinction by feeding off of the animals this planet provided. Hunting might not be necessary for survival anymore, but to the 750,000 hunters this year, including myself, it’s necessary to keep the tradition alive as a reminder to humans how we’ve made it this far.

The Blockbuster Bust

Do you remember renting movies as a child? Going to Blockbuster and finding that film you’ve wanted to see for the longest time? Maybe it was a rainy day and the thought of relaxing with a nice movie appealed to everyone. Sadly those memories of pure movie bliss will remain just that; memories. Blockbuster plans to end all domestic retail activity, as well as its by-mail movie distribution, by early 2014. The home movie provider’s parent company, DISH Network, announced the company will close all of its approximately 300 remaining U.S.-based and company-owned retail stores. However the franchised and licensed stores will remain open.

Amanda, a freshman, viewed this change as a sad occurrence. “It’s upsetting to think about how I used to go there as a kid with my grandparents. In a way, that’s one of the few memories I have of them before they passed away. Now that the store will be closing, it’s kind of like I’ll be losing that physically tangible memory.”

Nate, a sophomore, stated, “I’m not really upset because Netflix is a lot better. I don’t have to go anywhere. I can just stay home and order any movie I can think of. Besides, I remember Blockbuster was always very expensive.”

Nicole, a freshman, was torn about the situation. “Yeah it’s sad but it’s not at the same time. I will miss going to rent a movie and looking at all the candy I front of the register. But then again times are changing and the world is becoming more advanced. There’s Red Box and Netflix as a way to get movies. Blockbuster just became too inconvenient. Why waste time and money on finding a movie (if it wasn’t rented out) when you can order one from home for a cheaper price.”

The overall reaction that I found was that while some people felt the sorrow of losing a once beloved store, others could really care less.

With all those factors in mind, there are some possible solutions to this major problem on our campus.

The first solution is a better advertising campaign for Penn State Wilkes-Barre in the Luzerne County area. Our campus should advertise more on the radio, television, and at local community events. These advertisements will spread the Penn State Wilkes-Barre reputation, which will increase attending college student numbers by a certain percentage.

The next solution is an increase in the amount of degrees for four-year or two-year majors and minors. If Penn State Wilkes-Barre had a larger variety of degrees, more students would stay on this campus until graduation as compared to the usual Two-plus-Two program route that most students take. Our campus population would increase significantly and a larger variety in courses would be provided to accommodate this larger amount of students. Ultimately, students will better satisfied with the variety and colorful assortment of new courses unlike those usually offered on our campus.

As you can see, this loss of population is an important issue that must be addressed by the faculty and staff of our campus. This problem isn’t only faced by our campus, but multiple campuses around the nation. If we don’t find a solution to our problem, there will large cuts in our budget and educational courses due to the lack of tuition funds to support these programs. There are many other solutions to this problem not stated in my article, but it is crucial that we discuss and find the perfect answer before it is too late. As an attending student, it would be a huge disappointment to lose programs and our reputation to this fixable issue.

Would You Like Some Pigskin With That Turkey?

Food, family, and of course football—what one can look forward to every fourth Thursday in November.

Football has been played consecutively on Thanksgiving Day since 1920 excluding 1941-1944; even on the confusing years of 1939 and 1940. This is when President Roosevelt made Thanksgiving the third week in November instead of the fourth week to extend the Christmas shopping season. During those years, football was played both on the Roosevelt Thanksgiving and the traditional Thanksgiving.

The Detroit Lions have played every year since 1945. This year, they made turkey day memorable by putting a 40-10 shellacking on the visiting Green Bay Packers. Overall the Lions have a 34-38 record on Thanksgiving Day. The Dallas Cowboys have the second longest streak of playing on Thanksgiving (since 1978). This year in Dallas, Scranton’s own Matt McGloin suited up to play for the Oakland Raiders who looked sharp going into halftime with a 21-7 lead. In the second half, it was all downhill for the Raiders as they failed to find the end zone. The former Penn State quarterback threw for 255 yards and a costly late-game interception as McGloin suffered his second NFL loss, this time to the Cowboys (31-24). The Baltimore Ravens kept their perfect record on Thanksgiving (now 2-0) and the Pitt Panthers’ improbable victory over the BCS hungry Badgers, Robinson finished the season with a remarkable 1,432 receiving yards. Even more remarkable? Those yards came from the right arm of freshman quarterback Christian Hackenberg. He ended the season with 2,955 passing yards. To put that into perspective, Matt McGloin set the Penn State single season passing record in 2012 with 3,271 yards. In Hackenberg’s first season as a college quarterback, he was 316 yards away from breaking a school record himself. His efforts earned him the Big Ten freshman of the year. This is surely a sign of good things to come for Penn State’s football program. Allen Robinson is toying with the notion of an NFL career right after this season. He will talk with coaches during the offseason.

We Have a Record Breaker!

In Penn State’s heart-breaking loss to Minnesota, there was some light shed on the event as the Golden Gophers walked away with the Governors’ Trophy. It was a fourth quarter, 12 yard strike from Christian Hackenberg to Allen Robinson that landed the talented wide receiver atop the record books at Penn State. He broke the previous record (1,084 yards) for receiving yards in a season set by Bobby Engram back in 1995. The 6’3” junior out of Southfield, Michigan needed 42 yards coming into the Minnesota game to set the record. He did just that as he caught seven passes for 63 yards. With the conclusion of the season and the Nittany Lions’ improbable victory over the BCS hungry Badgers, Robinson finished the season with a remarkable 1,432 receiving yards. Even more remarkable? Those yards came from the right arm of freshman quarterback Christian Hackenberg. He ended the season with 2,955 passing yards. To put that into perspective, Matt McGloin set the Penn State single season passing record in 2012 with 3,271 yards. In Hackenberg’s first season as a college quarterback, he was 316 yards away from breaking a school record himself. His efforts earned him the Big Ten freshman of the year. 2013 will be the last year for the BCS ranking system in college football. Next year playoffs (yes playoffs!) will be utilized by college football. The final year of the BCS offers some great, perhaps often underappreciated bowl game matchups. On the first day of bowl games, (December 21st) nobody thinks of “good games.” However, the smaller games between smaller schools seem to be the most exciting. Sure, many will tune into ESPN at 8:30 pm on Monday, January 6th to watch Florida State battle the SEC champions Auburn Tigers for all the marbles, but there are some hidden gems in the bowl game schedule before then.

On December 21st, the 11-1 Fresno State bulldogs take on the roller coaster riders of the 2013 season, USC in the Las Vegas Bowl at 3:30 on ESPN. This should be an interesting game because USC dropped four games to noteworthy opponents, and Fresno State, coming from a weaker conference being the Mountain West. They have lost their regular season finale to San Jose State, but claimed the conference championship against Utah State. Mainly blowing out opponents this year, the Las Vegas Bowl should offer a good game when the Bulldogs take on a better opponent in USC. Mark your calendars for the Texas Bowl on Friday, December 27th. The Golden Gophers of Minnesota take on a battered Syracuse team at 6pm on ESPN two days after Christmas. Minnesota really played well this year by busting up the Big Ten and earning an 8-4 record. Syracuse has their hands full at 6-6, but playing at a stadium (Reliant Stadium in Houston) that has a retractable roof, should offer comfort for a team used to playing their home games in a dome.

Two games on December 28th look to be promising matchups. The first is the Pinstripe Bowl at noon on ESPN featuring Notre Dame and Rutgers. Two teams used to playing in cold weather this time of year face off in Yankee Stadium.

It’s Not Just The Winter Blues

Depression is a serious mental health disorder that affects millions of Americans. Its symptoms include social withdrawal, hopelessness, constant fatigue, lack of motivation, apathy and constant low mood for a period of several weeks, among many others. While many people seem to know what a standard depression (or more accurately “Major Depressive Disorder”) entails, people are largely unaware of its sister affliction, Seasonal Affective Disorder, or SAD. People affected by SAD tend to have many of the symptoms of Major Depressive Disorder, plus a few that are more prominent in SAD, such as oversleeping, overeating (especially carb-heavy foods), morning sickness and difficulty waking up. True to the name, Seasonal Affective Disorder affects most afflicted individuals in the colder months, however a less common form of the disorder is known to strike in the summer months. This is said to be due to lower light levels in the winter, which is brought on by shorter days and the increased prevalence of cloudy/rainy weather. Individuals afflicted with SAD may be completely normal in the other seasons or experience a milder form of depression known as dysphoria throughout the remainder of the year. According to the Mood Disorders Society of Canada, up to 20% of people diagnosed with SAD also have Bipolar disorder. This combination of disorders is treated in different ways than SAD alone. Seasonal depression afflicts people in colder climates disproportionately, with the highest prevalence in areas which experience the polar night phenomenon (the uninterrupted months of night that occur in the winter near the poles.) Among people living in Alaska for example, the prevalence of people diagnosed with the disorder is 8.9%, but up to a quarter of the population may have a milder (“subsyndromal”) form of it. Many people have trouble managing the disorder because they are not used to dealing with the effects of depressed mood for long periods of time. However, many natural remedies do exist. Many people use melatonin, which is a naturally occurring sleep regulator in the body. Taken at carefully timed intervals, it can normalize seasonal mood shifts. Doctors studying the disorder have found light therapy to be effective in a majority of patients. Used in conjunction with light therapy is dawn simulation, where an artificial light mimics a rising sun. 83% of people react positively to this treatment. Even the simple act of forcing yourself to get exercise in the winter months may improve seasonal depression.

If you know someone who has this ailment, be supportive towards that person, but don’t expect them to change overnight.

Yet to be performed on the health effects of e-cig use. However, most users feel that they are healthier than traditional cigarettes. The debate even spurred comment from Chancellor Davis and Head of Campus Security Gary Beisel, who clarified the policy and explained its necessity.

After several weeks of contentious and often hot-headed debate, the matter was closed. The uptop that is that the newly formed “Just Do It” committee would look into the idea of mixed waste disposal containers. No fine was imposed and the original campus smoking policy still stands, no matter how often violated it may be. However, it did have the effect of causing people to be aware of the litter issue outside the Student Commons, which was greatly reduced in the weeks following the debate.

The South will Rise Again, but Not Before These Prices Do

This past July marked 150 years since the Battle of Gettysburg. The town lies about half an hour outside of Harrisburg and since the prestigious anniversary was finally upon us, I decided to see the town and battlefield for myself. Most people travel to Gettysburg when they’re young; a good amount of the people I know went on field trips to this town during elementary school, others with the Boy Scouts and some with family. The opportunity finally arrived for me to go and there was no way I was turning up an event this big.

The battle was a turning point in American history so naturally it’s a pretty big deal to get me wrong though, reenactments are called reenactments for a reason: it was intense and adrenaline was pumping. Honestly was like I was watching the original battle unfold. You’d think that $40 a ticket seems reasonable, right? They have to make their money somehow. But Gettysburg was getting out of control. (I would hate to see the prices for the 200th anniversary).

It was $40 just to stand there and watch. It was an extra $30 to go and have a nice seat in the grandstands. There were over 12,000 reenactors and nearly 60,000 spectators that weekend. If I did my math right, that’s over $2 million they made on their own the audience alone. Did I mention reenactors had to pay to be in it; not too many people talked about that. He never did say how much they were charged to be in it; not too many people talked about that. I could just imagine how much they made with $40 a ticket being paid to stand there in blistering heat watching sweaty men charge around each other for a couple hours. Don’t let the locals. Gettysburg is decorated the same as it was a century and a half ago - the only big difference is the thousands of cars zooming around and the fatty fast food chains everywhere. Shops are still in 19th century style, roads are paved with cobblestones and the townsfolk even dress like they would in the time of Lincoln!

Nonetheless, it’s understandable how expensive a reenactment can be. Thousands of rounds of blanks are fired along with hundreds of shots of artillery. Of course one has to wonder how much the people in charge pocketed after the event, especially when millions were involved.

Despite the greed there is a lot of sentimentality surrounding the battlefield to this day. Yes, they had to pay to be a part of it, but that didn’t stop those people from being reenactors, Confederate or Union. Filmmings of the reenactment are all over YouTube. One YouTube user, “Corporal19b”’s comment caught my attention on one of the videos. He said, “I was in the charge, our captain started crying afterwards because of the emotion. I watched as our company went charging thru [sic] the fence and we dropped like flies.” On the 7th and final day of the 150th reenactment, right after the battle ended, it started pouring down rain.

Despite the greed behind it today, the event always has been and always will be very emotional. There is no feeling like going to Gettysburg. It’s a very different environment; even the air environment what it feels like to reenact or Union. Filmings of the reenactment, right after the final day of the 150th anniversary was like I was there with cobblestones and the townsfolk even dress like they would in the time of Lincoln!

Every year during July the town holds a massive reenactment that involves thousands of volunteers and thousands of spectators. Since this was the 150th anniversary, it was their biggest crowd by far. I could just imagine how much they made with $40 a ticket being paid to stand there.
